Reflection - Matthew 4:12-23

Something in Jesus attracted a group to follow him. They must have known of him already, had been looking forward to meeting him, and now were ready to leave John the Baptist and follow him. Maybe they saw him as the one they admired in how he dealt with people with compassion and dignity; maybe his words and vision about a better world and the coming of God's kingdom drew them; maybe just his personality and his offer of friendship. Whatever it was, it was enough for them to throw in their lot with him, bringing others with them.

Something for ourselves: Can we find out what it is in Jesus that attracts us; What it is we might ask him for; What it is we might worth following.

He offers his friendship, forgiveness and also a meaning to life. That life is lived for love, love for the people special to us and for the world, a love that reaches beyond here to eternity.

To do the world a world of Good

Our following of Jesus is following a person, not just a set of rules. We follow him to love the father who created us in the image of God. We follow him to make our world a better place: 'to do the world a world of good'.

Take time this week to be grateful that we have this friendship in our lives that gives life and breadth to every other love we have; and throw in our lot to bring about the kingdom of God in compassion, justice and love.
